Rishikesh

A paradise for adventure sports enthusiasts and devotees alike, Rishikesh is one of the most famous vacation spots in India. The place emerged as the World capital of Yoga when the Beatles paid a visit to the ashram of Maharishi Mahesh Yogi.

Located in the foothills of the majestic Himalayas, Rishikesh is settled in the picturesque state of Uttarakhand. Just 225 kms from New Delhi, Rishikesh is perfect for a weekend trip where you can indulge yourself in a variety of adventure sports like rafting, hiking, bungee jumping etc. Besides, Raja Ji National Park is just 16 kms away which attracts the wildlife fans too. The famous Laxman Jhula and the gigantic statue of Shiva meditating in the Ganges, attract millions of devotees every year.

Rishikesh has become a favourite destination for not only peace seekers but adventurous backpackers alike through white water rafting with beach camping on the silver clean beaches of the Ganges, bungee jump, zip line tour and more. Head to this beautiful city located in the foothills of the Himalayas where a new world of adventure and spirituality awaits.

Rishikesh has been an abode of ascetics since, well, time immemorial. It is also important as the gateway to the Garhwal mountains and holy spots in them like the source of the Ganga, the Badrinath and Kedarnath shrines and more. And now, Rishikesh is also the “yoga capital of the world”, as Uttarakhand Tourism would have it.

Rishikesh stands on both banks of the Ganga. There is free access to the unpolluted waters and the water temperature is just perfect most of the year. The undercurrents of spirituality are as steady here as the flow of the mighty Ganga. But do take care, every year people drown in the river and in the fraudulent schemes of pretend spiritualists. The best way to go around is on foot as the town is hilly and consists of narrow lanes.

To cross the river take a motor ferry from the narrow iron suspension bridge known as Ram Jhula, which is near the Swargashram area, or walk across either Ram Jhula or Lakshman Jhula, which is 2 km upstream. Noisy tempos (locally called Vikrams) are affordable contraptions. Autos and Vikrams are available on the main road, also on the road to Badrinath. Autorickshaw drivers will take you temple sightseeing, covering the major temples in 3-4 hrs.

Lakshman Jhula, the famous 450-foot long suspension bridge, was built in 1939. It is said that Lord Ram’s brother Lakshman crossed the Ganga on a jute rope from here. The Lakshman and Raghunath temples are here. This part of town is better known for its busy bazaars and cafés. The new 13-storey Trimbakeshwar Mandir near the Lakshman Jhula has many shrines, chambers that house religious and Vedic texts and jewellery and gems shops. Nearby is the Swarg Niwas Mandir, a 12-storey temple with various idols of Hindu gods and goddesses on its many floors.

Just 2 km ahead downstream from Lakshman Jhula, at Muni-ki-Reti, is another suspension bridge, built later. This is Ram Jhula (also called Shivanand Jhula) surrounded by a cluster of ashrams on both sides. It connects Sivananda Ashram on the east bank and Swargashram on the west. Swargashram is a bustling spiritual hub with many ashrams, temples, bazaars and ghats.

While it has been a centuries-old tradition to worship the river in the morning and evening in small private ceremonies, the Parmarth Niketan Ashram in Rishikesh has converted the evening aarti ritual to a spectacular show. It is alternatively called touristy and hypnotic but don’t miss it. The diyas floating on the Ganga in the dark are a sight to behold. If you are staying in an ashram, then it probably has its own timings for the aarti.
It is believed that the confluence of Ganga, Yamuna and Saraswati took place here. This ghat is large and clean. Many ashrams in Rishikesh offer short and long-term courses in yoga. Some of the most respected names are the Sivananda Ashram, Omkarananda Patanjala Yoga Kendra, Parmarth Niketan and Yoga Niketan Ashram.

It is advisable to join a well-known ashram or a place recommended by someone, for yoga or meditation classes mushroom all over town. Reiki, Ayurvedic massage, crystal healing and other attractions for Western tourists are on offer everywhere. An annual International Yoga Festival (March 1-7; internationalyogafestival.com) is organised jointly by Uttarakhand Tourism and Parmarth Niketan Ashram.

The one thing most people carry back with them from Rishikesh is the holy water of the Ganga. Plastic bottles for carrying Gangajal are sold on all the major ghats. The narrow lanes of the town are lined with shops selling gems, precious and semi-precious stones, puja items, and religious music CDs.

What To SEE

Ganga Aarti at Triveni Ghat

[Mayakund, Rishikesh, Uttarakhand 249201, India]

After sunset, the famous Ganga Aarti takes place at the Triveni Ghat, which sees the whole stretch of Triveni Ghat come alive. Hundreds of leafed lamps float down the stream as divinity becomes the very air. You can buy these dias from the nearby stalls and be a part of the beautiful custom. It is believed that the aarti transports the devotee to a different world altogether. The oil lamps floating on the Ganga in the dark are a sight to behold.

Laxman Jhula Market

Lakshman Jhula Market is one of the most popular markets in Rishikesh. The small shops and stalls attract every kind of traveller's attention with their items such as rudrakshas, idols of Gods, local jewellery and wooden items. Those who are inclined to rejuvenate themselves by following the healthy way of living can find all kinds of ayurvedic medicines and oils at this market. For those who love trinkets and other silver and brass accessories to go with their trendy clothes, this market is the place to be!

4 Neelkanth Mahadev Temple

The Neelkanth Mahadev Temple in Rishikesh is ancient and situated at an altitude of 1675 m on a hill above the Swarg Ashram, which overlooks the Nar Narayan mountain ranges. The drive to the temple is one of the most thrilling as well as scenic rides in the region. The temple is said to be built after a great mythological episode when Lord Shiva drank the venom that came from the ocean during 'Samudra Manthan'.

This caused Lord Shiva's throat to turn blue and thus, the name Neelkanth. This holy shrine of the Neelkanth Mahadev is now visited by tourists throughout the year, particularly during the festival of Maha Shivratri. Situated at 5,500 ft, this temple attracts many Shiva devotees. The legend goes that when the demons and gods churned the ocean in their quest for the nectar of immortality, it was here that Shiva drank the poison that surfaced and held it in his throat, which turned blue.

5 Triveni Ghat

Triveni Ghat is believed that the confluence of Ganga, Yamuna and Saraswati took place here. It is also a spot for the pilgrims who visit Rishikesh to take a holy dip in its water. This ghat is large and clean, and has separate changing rooms for women.

After sunset, the famous Ganga Maha Aarti takes place at around 6 PM, which sees the whole ghat come alive with divinity and religious fervour. Hundreds of leafed lamps float down the stream as divinity becomes the very air. You can buy these diyas from the nearby stalls and be a part of the beautiful custom. It is believed that a dip at Triveni Ghat can relieve one from the sins and help them attain salvation. A gigantic idol of Lord Shiva stands tall here, and is a sight to watch for in the monsoons when it is almost half-submerged in the water.

It is believed that the confluence of Ganga, Yamuna and Saraswati took place here. This ghat is large and clean, and has separate changing rooms for women. Nearby is the Rishikund or sages' pond. This is said to have been a havan kund where the holy men performed fire rituals in ancient times. There is also a Shani Mandir here.
